The screenplay is based on the 1957 Broadway musical of the same name, which was based on the 1959 novel of the same name by Alan Jay Lerner and Frederick Loewe, and the 1959 West German film The Sound of Music. The film was filmed at the Paramount Studios lot and on location in Italy, Austria, Switzerland, and the United States. It tells the story of the von Trapp family, a singing group in the fictional town of Salzburg, Austria, during the Nazi occupation of World War II. The film was released theatrically on August 18, 1965, by Paramount Pictures, and became the highest-grossing film of 1965, worldwide and in the United States. It was a success in every region of the world, and had particular success in North America, the United Kingdom, and France, and has since attained a stature as one of the greatest musicals of all time. It was nominated for six Academy Awards, including Best Picture, Best Actor for Plummer, Best Actress for Andrews, and Best Original Score for

Rodgers and Hammerstein. It won five of the six Best Picture nominations. It was also nominated for eleven Golden Globes, winning four, including Best Motion Picture – Musical or Comedy and Best Actress in a Motion Picture – Musical or Comedy for Andrews. The film is a part of the cultural landscape in the Western world, the United States in particular, and has since been cited as a major influence on numerous works of film, television, theatre, and music. Wise intended to make a film about the German invasion of Austria during World War II, but changed the script to focus on the Nazis occupying Austria.[1] He envisioned a film that would be more appealing to the public than a drama about the bombing of German cities. He approached Martin Scorsese to help him edit the film, but was turned down. Wise met with his producers, who informed him that their American investors would not fund the project unless they were given a star; they believed the film could be made as a musical. Scorsese agreed to direct the picture and convinced Wise to remain on as director. He convinced Andrews to perform in the film by telling her, "You'll have fun doing it, and it will be a great production. Julie will be a great Maria and you will be wonderful in it." [2] Upon its release, The Sound of Music had good word of mouth from audience reaction. The New York Times wrote that it was "a sentimental musical that carries great message of understanding 82157476af
